Plant Family of the Month

Azaleas & Vireyas - Ericaceae (Rhododendron Family)

Here in the Pacific Northwest, we are familiar with Rhododendrons, the most visible member of the Ericaceae family in our gardens. They have tropical cousins in the genus Vireya, of which we have a diverse collection. Vireya species, growing in S.E. Asia, number over 300, approximately one third of all Rhododendrons.

They were introduced to Britain in 1845. Vireyas mostly grow in the cooler areas in the tropics, either as epiphytes high in the tall trees of the cloud forest, or in more open ground in shrubby areas. They may bloom sporadically all year round, and we feature them whenever in bloom in the Seasonal House or Fern House.

Deciduous and evergreen hardy Azaleas are also familiar in our gardens here, and we often see brightly colored Florist Azaleas offered in flower shops for interior home décor. These are hybridized evergreen plants bred to be forced into bloom at any time of year. Some are winter hardy, and some are not. Florist Azaleas are featured in our Seasonal House in winter.

Another interesting genus in the Conservatory Ericaceae collections is Agapetes, a sub-tropical, epiphytic woody vine. Look for it clamoring above the pond in the Fern House. Tiny red flowers hang like jewels in spring and fall.

A- Number of glass panes: 3,426.

Q- How big is it?

A- Number of square feet inside the Conservatory: 6,200. Number of square feet of supplemental greenhouse production space under glass: 10,400; plus several acres of outdoor nursery space. Most conservatory-type display gardens have at least double the greenhouse production space to public display space in order to maintain large collections and ensure spectacular displays year around.

Q- What is the oldest part of the building?

A- The lunette or peacock window over the main entry is the only original wood and glass piece remaining from 1912 after two renovations. It was restored in 2000.

Q- What is the oldest plant in the Conservatory?

A- The oldest plants on display now are probably the Sago Palm (Cycas revoluta) and the Jade Tree (Crassula argentea). Both are over 75 years old.

Q- What is White Wash?

A- It is a chalky paint sprayed on the glass in early summer to protect the plants from excessive sun and heat. In the fall the white wash is removed when days become shorter and darker.

Q- How do you control the temperature and humidity?

A- The Conservatory heating system is computer controlled. Two natural gas fired boilers heat water and valves open allowing hot water into pipes located below the display benches. The overhead and underbench vents are also computer controlled to regulate temperature and humidity. There is a sensing device in each house.

Q- Who is the statue out front?

A- William Henry Seward (1801-1872) was the US Secretary of State under President Lincoln. He negotiated the purchase of Alaska from Russia in 1867 for 7.2 million dollars, about 2 cents per acre. This became known as "Seward's Folly".

Q- Do you sell any plants?

A- The FOC Gift Shop has a variety of plants for sale. We also have two large plant sales per year, on the Saturday of Mother's Day weekend in May and a Saturday in mid-September.

Q- How old is the huge cactus in the Cactus House?

A- It is probably about 40 years old – young in cactus terms. Opuntias grow rapidly and we prune ours frequently every year as it reaches the glass.

Q- Do you have carnivorous plants?

A- Yes, they are usually found in the boggy planters flanking the pool in the Fern House. Our collection includes Venus Fly Traps, Sundews, Pitcher Plants and more.

Q- Are the fruits on the Fishtail Palm edible?

A- They are not palatable to humans, but are enjoyed by birds and monkeys in the wild.

Q- Where do your plants come from?

A- We grow plants in our production greenhouse space from seeds, cuttings and divisions. We accept selected donated plants from the public. We are a certified US Fish and Wildlife Plant Rescue Center, accepting plants confiscated by US Customs when they are illegally imported.

Q- Who are those cats?

A- Frank, the mitted sealpoint, and Ivan the black and white have lived here several years. They both showed up here as strays and decided to stay. The gardening staff and the FOC donate their food and medical expenses. Check out their web pages on www.shopcat.com!

Q- How many people work here?

A- There are five Seattle Park Department gardeners plus a summer temporary gardener. The Friends of the Conservatory provides many volunteers to help with all kinds of tasks. Learn more about volunteering.

Q- Where does the donation money go?

A- Currently it goes into a special fund we can use to purchase plants or to enhance our displays.

What people are saying

A trip to the Conservatory is yet another cure for the rainy-day blues. It's like being in the wilderness without actually having to be outside. Lush and beautiful plants and such vibrant shades of green.

There are all kinds of aloe plants, cacti, "upside-down flowers", orchids, etc, as well as neat sculptures and places to sit and soak in the fresh air and beauty.

Go.

The conservatory is awesome. It smells so good in there! There are various "houses" to walk through, with clear documentation of what plants are displayed. The flowers and plants are beautiful and lush.

I just went again last week and saw orchids, gardenias, hydrangeas, venus fly traps, ferns, and an entire house of cacti, just to name a few. This place makes me happy :)

-- Nicole E.

It's a cold winter day, and we're feeling the blues. We're also suffering from that thinning wallet disease that seems to be going around.

Here's a spot that will warm you up quick, lift the spirits, and doesn't cost a cent, although it does take donations.

The flowers and plants here are gorgeous; unique, exotic, and interesting flora that is impossible to not enjoy.

Step in here, enjoy the warmth and the beauty. I guarantee you will walk out with an improved outlook, especially if you remember not to stick your fingers into the Venus Flytrap.

-- Izzy W.

After making it through my first gray Seattle winter, my stop at the conservatory was just what I needed. The colors and smells were my light at the end of the tunnel. Yay, there's life. Another bonus is that there is no charge for a walk through serenity.

-- Emily T.

CONSERVATORY GIFT SHOP

The Volunteer Park Conservatory Gift Shop is also the Resource Center

Gift Shop & Resource Center

The gift shop sells tropical plants, orchids, cactus and succulents similar to those found on display within the Conservatory. It specializes in garden and botanical themed items, such as colorful glass hummingbird feeders and soothing wind chimes. It also sells gloves and tools, as well as our gardeners’ favorite pruners.

The gift shop has books on plants and gardening, along with educational books for children.

Floating candles and locally made jewelry are popular gift items for locals and tourists alike.

The Friends of the Conservatory opened the Gift Shop and Resource Center in February 2003 to help generate a revenue source to support the Conservatory and to provide reference materials for visitors to the Conservatory.

Stop by to visit us and find many treasures for your home and garden!
